

Do You Read Labels?

Domestic science teachers and food authorities are urging the housewife to carefully read the labels on all food articles.

The laws of most States compel food manufacturers to print the ingredients of their products on the label, and this enables consumers to distinguish healthful foods from those which may be deleterious.

High-grade baking powders are made of pure cream of tartar, derived from grapes. Royal Baking Powder is a type of the highest grade. It is healthful beyond a doubt and the safest and best to use.

The low-grade baking powders are made from alum, a mineral acid salt, or phosphate of lime.

Consumers can learn the character of the baking powder by referring to the label, which must state whether the contents include cream of tartar, alum or phosphate.

FRANK E. LANGLEY, Publisher

The New York heiress who has just married Skiddy Von Stade should beware of the automobile.

Harvard men may reasonably regret that their alma mater had to be dragged into the latest Thaw mess.

"Germans keep up offensive in the East," says a newspaper headline. Quite offensive, so the Russians think.

Perhaps Mr. Huerta didn't know we have a system of espionage on tricky critters who come to the United States.

There is no wonder that President Wilson got lost while contemplating the beauties of Vermont scenery—it is so entrancing.

The Rutland youth who has just been appointed to Annapolis by Congressman Greene knows by recent revelations there what not to do.

They lighted up a dark street in Rutland only to discover that the pavement was full of holes. What is the use of progress anyway?

If they should send all Coaticook, P. Q., down to the Thaw hearing the verdict would be unanimous that Harry is sane. The fugitive got a firm grip on the town which has the accent on the second syllable beginning with the "a" vowel.

The records show that Vermont automobiles are being registered at the rate of 30 per day; but there are no records of mortgage plasters. We'll wager, however, there are not 30 a day of the latter; Vermonters are too level-headed.

No word on the probable nature of Germany's reply to the United States on submarine warfare would be allowed by the state department to go out to the public unless it was well backed up; and hence there is reason for optimism as the result of the official announcement from the state department on Monday.

The Russians must have made long inroads on Galician territory in order to make such lengthy retreats now and still be on Galician soil. The importance of their early successes becomes the more apparent as the public contemplates the task which Germany found after repulsing to Austria's urgent call for help.

Some 70 farmers of Pawlet are determined to put their town into the front rank of Vermont agriculture by banding together for mutual benefit. The interchange of ideas that will result from association in a town or a county organization will prove of no slight value, while the information which will come to the organization from an expert on agriculture will be of still more benefit. Pawlet is likely to prosper through this greater attention to the details of farming. Other towns have the same opportunity to make progress.

The new series of clinics on poliomyelitis throughout Vermont under the auspices of the state board of health will prove of even more actual benefit than the first, because the clinics will enable the physicians to study the patients who have been conducting home treatment under the instruction given at the first clinics. Moreover, the arrangement of the second series goes to show that the management for investigations substantiated paralysis, or poliomyelitis, is not a mere flash in the pan, but is backed by a well-defined purpose. The responses to the second invitation to the clinics should be very general.

We trust that all readers of The Times are following the course of the North Randolph automobile tourists as they make their way across the continent to the western slope of the country, the occasional letters from E. D. Camp furnishing valuable sidelights on the territory passed through and the people occupying those territories. Mr. Camp writes in a very interesting way of the things and the people as they appear to him, and by the stay-at-home people of Vermont his contributions are gladly welcomed. The tourists have just passed through Colorado and are now in Utah, being still a long distance from their destination, but bravely forging along.

USES OF A PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Commenting on The Times' recent statement about a $15,000 bequest to the Newburyport, Mass., library on condition that the library be kept open on Sunday, the Quincy (Mass.) Ledger remarks: "The experiment was tried at the Thomas Crane public library in this city and was so unsuccessful that it was abandoned. The readingroom became a trysting place for lovers who not only did not care to read themselves but prevented others from reading."

What effect would a few rules and strict enforcement of those rules have on such practices? We have heard of few complaints about the Boston public library becoming a trysting place for lovers, to the inconvenience of patrons who go there for mental pabulum rather than heart thrills. Possibly a little of the systematic regulation of the great Boston institution might be put into practice in some of the libraries of suburban cities with good results. At any rate, the practice should not be allowed to interfere with that for which the public library is intended; the readingroom is intended as a place where anyone may spend a few hours in mental development or mental recreation. If Quincy had exercised a somewhat stricter hand possibly the ignominy of being forced to close the public library on Sundays because of love-making would not have been forced upon the community.

CURRENT COMMENT

An Unfortunate Letter.

Someone has advanced the opinion that the letter "e" is the most unfortunate character in the English alphabet, because it is always out of cash, forever in debt, never out of danger and in hell all the time. But we call his attention to the fact that "e" never is in war, and always in peace. It is the beginning of existence, the commencement of ease and the end of trouble. Without it there would be no meat, no life and no heaven. It is the center of honesty, makes love perfect and without it there would be no editors, devils nor news.—Charleston Gazette.

Select a Vermont.

The new board which has the educational affairs of the state under its control is made up of level-headed men who will no doubt exert every means within their power to promote and advance the educational interest of the state. To do this successfully they need the advice and cooperation of the man who is to be the state superintendent of education and it would seem that inasmuch as the school year begins July 1, that selection should be made at an early day. The man chosen for this position should be a Vermont, one who is in touch with present conditions and the requirements of the new laws. The board should have his assistance in formulating their plans and laying out their work. It is upon him that the responsibility of carrying out the work will devolve. This being the case, we believe there should be no delay in making the appointment.—Morrisville News and Citizen.
